Description

A spear made from palm wood with black, white and red ornaments. Its wooden pike ends in serrated barbs; beneath the barbs are remains of a tuft of plant fibre. The end of the shaft is formed club-shaped. In the inventory this spear is described as "Buka spear", what indicates an origin from the northern Salomon Islands (Buka Island). More likely, however, is an origin on the island of New Guinea or the Bismarck Archipelago. Such richly decorated spears were used as dance or ceremonial spears.

The object comes from the collection of pharmacist, writer and doctor Albert Daiber (1857 - 1928), who undertook a journey to the South Seas from April to September 1900, which took him to then German and British colonial territories. Stops included Australia, the Bismarck Archipelago, the eastern part of the island of New Guinea, the Caroline Islands, the Mariana Islands and China (Hong Kong). Daiber described his experiences in the published travelogue "Eine Australien- und Südseefahrt" from 1902. In 1909, Albert Daiber emigrated to Chile. Beforehand he has given the collected objects from his voyage to Otto Leube in Ulm, who initially stored the collection and after Albert Daiber's death gave it to the Museum of the City of Ulm as a deposit in 1930.
